"SAFE IN MOTHER'S ARMS AGAIN." Lizzie Selden was stolen from the sidewalk of her home in Brooklyn, August 29, and was restored to her parents August 31.
Stolen! A dear little child of four,
sawed away from her mother's arms, plashed the tides through cities three,
little child in peril, and the mother
who had adopted a distant land?
With anger and pity we bled and turned
And over the lost one all hearts yearned.
Slow and at an even evening down, Bringing peace to country and town;
Sweaty lifted the evening hymn;
Little child in peril, and the mother
who had adopted a distant land?
And over the lost one all hearts yearned.

THE GOVERNOR'S STORY.
We were very poor, said the governor, my mother and I. We lived in a little cabin at the foot of Linton, and saw a hard time. My father had died when I was 16 years old, leaving us nothing but an honest and a hard time. I was a poor stout and hearty, my wages were very low, and I had to toil late and early to provide the necessities of life. But I was not a poor man, I was happy and contented enough; that is, as much as an unsatisfied mortal is, until one day I had a vision of a better life. I was confident if she thought of me at all,
it was with feelings of contempt and disdain. Not on account of my personal appearance, it is true, for though I was rough and uncultivated, and
my hair was grizzled, and my face told, and my face browned by ex-posure to the sun, still I had a certain strength and great agility,
and my hair and eyes were as bright as midnight, and many said that I was handsome. But I was poor and she was rich, and she was
Gen. Linton's daughter, and it was the old, old story, it must have been so from the beginning of time.
I drew me irresistibly toward her,
for she was a queenly looking girl,
with flashing eyes and magnificent
dark hair, and a crown of gold, majestic and stately. But, however, it might have been, I am certain of one thing, and that is, that I was not a poor man, I was confident if she thought of me at all,
it was with feelings of contempt and
appearance, it is true, for though I

was handsome. But I was poor
and she was rich, and she was
been so from the beginning of time.
I drew me irresistibly toward her,
for she was a queenly looking girl,
with flashing eyes and magnificent
dark hair, and a crown of gold,
tain of one thing, and that is, that
fident if she thought of me at all,
it was with feelings of contempt and
appearance, it is true, for though I
was rough and uncultivated, and
told, and my face browned by ex-posure to the sun, still I had a
certain strength and great agility,
